Vincent Tetreault finally finished his short film called Toys of War, and now he is throwing a contest!

While you still can't watch the film on the official blog, Vincent is putting a DVD together and will be giving one (or a few?) away for free. All you need to do is take a picture of yourself with a Toys of War wallpaper on your computer. We did debut the film on our live show not long ago, but the video quality of our broadcasts probably doesn't do Vincents work much justice.

So let's break all this stuff down. First off you can see many behind the scenes pictures and read about the project (if you haven't already) over here on the blog .

Next you can visit the official Vimeo page for this cool film over here .

Finally is Vincents YouTube page which has similar videos but slightly less quality. It's a good channel to subscribe to if you want to get any further updates on the DVD release.

If you want to get a DVD enter the contest. Here are the entries so far. You can get a taste for what some of the final shots look like by checking out the video below.

If you missed it, Vincent allowed us to play the full film during our previous live show that you can watch over here.
